.DISCUSSION...High pressure will move across the Pacific Northwest today. The next weather system will drop southeast along the British Columbia coast tonight and Friday morning, with light precipitation late Friday morning through the afternoon. Some of this could be as snow in the morning. Continue cool and unsettled conditions persist Saturday. There is the possibility of significant snowfall late Saturday night through Sunday.

NOTE: To ensure a spot forecast is available for the next 5 days, please submit a spot request each day. There is a link at the bottom of the spot form page to copy information from a previous request to a new one. Thanks.
